

A guide to blended learning

Blended learning

Blended learning combines the best of face to face teaching with tailored online activity and individual feedback. You benefit from group interaction in session and individual feedback in between. The difference between this and other teaching approaches is down to timing and the programme.

We offer Blended learning and blended online – two options to suit your budget and to maximise your study time whilst minimising your travel time. We have a strong track record to share with students.

The blend in structure

We plan every subject module, very, very carefully thinking about the pace of the knowledge development, when practice is needed and building up to the final assessment.

The blend of theory and commercial experience

Every module has a subject specialist, who's also a commercial practitioner, so you have the best blend of theory and real world expertise.

The blend of knowledge and practice

Students can attend class sessions and/or explore new theory online with guided lessons. Both study options provide you with a structured programme for practice and achievement.

The consistency of the course

Every module has a dedicated tutor, who marks and feeds back on all work submitted. So you have the continuity and the tutor keeps a careful eye on your individual progress.

All exam subjects include a dedicated mock exam, just like the real thing and a dedicated revision session. All assignments help to plan your time effectively and build in career progression too.

Balancing work, life and study

We have been running blended courses now for five years with outstanding results. Students have gained promotion, new roles and set up businesses for their employers.

Our aim is simple – we want you to progress your company and your career.
